

International Comparative Study on Long-term Care System 2013 Research Report

Research Title:

International Comparative Study on Long-term Care System 2013 (A study supported by Projects on Health Care and Health Promotion for Older People at Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare)

Year: 2013

Research Objectives:

Social participation among older people is essential in order to build an energetic longevity society and to successfully prevent the need for long-term care. In other words, it is critical that older people keep playing active roles in a society and family. In addition to health promotion and care prevention activities, older people are also expected to realize their role as providers in their communities and actually act as ones. Meanwhile, there are also pressing needs for systems to support healthy longevity and to build a society where people can live in peace even when they become frail. This study illustrates the latest system, social environment, cultural backgrounds, lives and perceptions of older people, and challenges in Japan and other countries. The study also aims to find the ideal conditions and directions in Japan from the international perspective and to make recommendations within and outside of the country.

Report Title:

International Comparative Study on Long-term Care System 2013: Research Report (A4 size, 156 pages, in Japanese)

Report Published in: March 2014

Contents of the Report:

Chapter 1: Background and Overview of the Study

Chapter 2: Long-Term Care Services in Denmark

Chapter 3: Long-Term Care Services in the Netherlands

Chapter 4: Long-Term Care Services in the UK

Chapter 5: Summaries and Implications for Japan